

Colorado Cycling Clubs/Teams

Being a member of a club does make the sport much more fun, and soon your club becomes your extended family. Cycling teams are like the Greek system, there's some really welcoming and fun groups and some others that are quite restrictive. And, of course, every state has their own version of the Delta House. There's a home for everyone. The Colorado Cycling Cup series for road and cyclocross also has a team component, so being a member of a team adds something to the event, as you are racing for your club's benefit as well as your own. Review the club info on the Colorado Cycling website. When considering a team keep in mind where most of the riders live, and who sponsors their team. It is important to live near a few other riders if you're not willing to drive or ride to their usual group ride meeting place. Something else to keep in mind is the ethos of the team. Do you agree with the team's values? Do the team's values matter much to you? Does the team support the kinds of things you want to support?
